February 5, 2022 by editor

Antony Blinken met, Thursday evening in Washington, Staffan de Mistura. On this occasion, the head of diplomacy reiterated “the continued commitment of the United States to support the actions of De Mistura to lead the UN political process in Western Sahara”, indicates the spokesman of the State Department in a press release.

After his tour, last January in Morocco, Algeria, Mauritania, Tindouf camps and Spain, the personal envoy of the United Nations Secretary General for the Sahara met this Thursday evening in Washington, in the capital of the United States, Antony Blinken. The meeting was not followed by a press briefing from both parties. Antony Blinken and the personal envoy of the UN Secretary General, at the end of this meeting, also discussed diplomatic engagement with international partners to strengthen a credible political process that will lead to a lasting and dignified resolution to this conflict.

Thus, the political process enshrined in Security Council resolution 2602 on the Sahara, which is based on the centrality of the Moroccan autonomy plan (proposed by Morocco as the only framework for achieving a lasting and acceptable political solution to the dispute over the Sahara), and the action of the new personal envoy of the SG of the UN are strongly supported by the USA to definitively settle this artificial conflict.

United States government official

Valuable meeting with UN Personal Envoy for Western Sahara, Staffan de Mistura, to discuss our support for @UN-led political process for Western Sahara leading to an enduring and dignified resolution of the conflict.
